

Paris, May 25, 2010. Slow month, this one that just went by! ... Mostly in Paris, with not much to show for it. I did manage to put in a few days of sailing in the Petite Camargue. Always good, especially when one is sailing with good friends, as it was the case.

We did have some visitors, friends and family, which is always a pleasure as well. And last but not least, I did finish the presentation on the construction of the model of the salvage tug Cintra that I had promised here, on my last Post Card. (See below.)

Next week we will be heading to the States for a one-week-break from Paris. We have not been on that side of the Atlantic since last summer, so we are looking very much forward to this visit. Let's see how things go!

Until the next one.
