

Lisbon, May 11, 2013. Just back home from a few days in Ireland, country number 67 on my list (check out the page Project 100 to see what this means). The "objective" was to "do" the Ring of Kerry and to visit the cliffs of Moher. This trip was somewhat different from most of my previous ones: normally I drive either my motorcycle or my 4WD to get there, this time I took the plane and rented a car locally; and normally I travel alone, this time I had the company of my cousin Luis. ...and we ate, drank beer, and listened to traditional music in absolutely fantastic pubs, and then stayed in equally charming little B&Bs. The only way to truly "see" Ireland. (For a few photos of this journey, see below.)

The next trip will be a family thing back to the US for our daughter's graduation from HS. That's it; you heard it right: graduation! Time just keeps on flying by.

Other than that, we have begun dealing with the upcoming move from Lisbon to Washington, DC for Lucy's next assignment. It is absolutely incredible but our days here in beautiful Lisbon are about to end...!

...And that's pretty much it for today, folks! Stay tuned to the next one.
Jorge.
