

Chevy Chase, Dec 22, 2013 Christmas time. Again!!! ...But that's ok, pretty soon it will be over. (It is absolutely amazing how fast time flew since we moved back to the US. If it keeps on going like this, pretty soon it will be time to move again...!)

Anyway, back to news. Here in our neck of the woods, everything is ticking more or less as expected for this time of the year. Filipa is here with us on school break (after a stellar 1st semester at school, I should add); Ben is getting here soon; Lucy is super busy at work, with the successive crisis in Sudan or South Sudan; and I am busy as ever with all my plans. ...As I said, all is normal!

Thanksgiving came, Thanksgiving went. This one was kind of special: it was our first Thanksgiving back in the US since 2005. Making it even more interesting, my older sister and younger brother flew from Europe to taste a true American Thanksgiving celebration. (We also hosted my younger sister and Lucy's older brother w/respective families, but those live here in the US so they know what this holiday is all about.)

And this is all for today. Stay tuned for more next year. Jorge.
